

Comptroller

Eliot Spitzer (D)

As NYC Comptroller, I won't be just counting the money. I'm going to be making the money count. Making sure that your money goes where it's supposed to go, and does what it's supposed to do. That means holding city agencies, and City Hall accountable for what they spend and how they spend it, constantly measuring results versus cost to ensure it's being spent right and spent fairly. That money goes to our senior centers, our schools, our libraries and our medical centers. It's the lifeblood of this city, the money New Yorkers depend upon — and they depend on the NYC Comptroller to watch every single cent of it. To see that it goes to every corner of the city and that it helps those who most desperately need it. But I'm going to do more with this office. A lot more. I'm going to make sure that all those Wall Street firms who want us to invest with them, play by the rules. That the Wall Street abuses I fought so hard against as NYS Attorney General won't go on under my watch. If money is power, then 140 billion dollars worth of your money is power enough to change behavior — and change this city.
